I attended the 52nd Annual Scientific Meeting & Workshops, sponsored by the American Society of Clinical Hypnosis. The Society's annual meeting is held each year in March, and typically held in a comfortable setting with a palette of workshop offerings that will appeal to both the beginner as well as the seasoned practitioner of hypnosis.

Meetings are open to persons holding masters and doctoral degrees in a healthcare profession, as well as graduate students in these disciplines. This year’s meeting was held at the Sheraton Music City Hotel — located in Nashville, Tenn. The venue was spacious, and easily accommodated our group. I would estimate the total attendance at about 650 people — but that’s not an official number.

The terrific thing about ASCH’s annual meeting is that it brings together, in one spot, most of the innovative thinkers in the field of clinical hypnosis. And, of course, I get to attend, too! Concurrent with the scientific meetings, newcomers to the field can take a beginner’s track 20-hour training, and those with a bit of training and experience can take the society’s intermediate training. Together, those trainings establish a foundation of knowledge that opens the door to working on certification and attending advanced courses in the future.

Attending the full program is time-intensive: this year’s activities began on a Friday evening, and wrapped up the following Tuesday afternoon. In the spirit of fiscal restraint, I only attended Friday...
From the President’s Desk: Thoughts for the ‘Meta-Collective’

Shari Conner, Ph.D.

I am honored to assume the role of President of APPT for the coming year, though I must confess that our board members actually deserve the majority of the credit for keeping this organization going. I’d therefore like to extend a sincere “thank you” to each current and past board member who has volunteered his or her time and energy toward the betterment of this important organization.

I’ve been giving some thought to my vision for APPT and my goals for the coming year; I would like to share some ideas I’ve had, and invite your feedback on them. As you know, our organization is unique and complex.

Unlike our respective professional groups, we in APPT strive to be a “meta-collective” of therapists, psychologists, medical professionals, social workers, and others who function within the mental health field and who bring the unique perspective of working in private practice.

I know of few organizations that can match the kind of networking, continuing education, and information-sharing that APPT provides to so many of us who have no “upper management” to disseminate news on insurance changes, bureaucratic obstacles, community resources, and other tidbits of generally helpful information.

Still, there are many areas that may need fine-tuning in order for us to continue growing and improving as an organization. For starters, I’d like to see APPT make a concerted effort to expand into the rural parts of the state. I have heard from many people that the benefits we offer to our members are sorely in need in Central and Western Nebraska. We currently have two dedicated board members who drive in for meetings from Lincoln (Kathy Dombrowski) and Grand Island (Seanne Emerton), and they tell me that many providers in rural Nebraska have voiced strong interest in an organization such as ours. Like the rest of us, they need this resource to help them stay abreast of needed information and to provide them with sympathetic and informed support as fellow private-practice professionals. I’d therefore like to put more effort into outreach and recruitment within nearby towns and beyond.

Second, it seems to me that APPT has grown a LOT in the past few years, and one of the major “growing pains” we have experienced centers on electronic communication. We have heard many comments on the use of the E-List as a helpful but sometimes overwhelming vehicle of communication among our members. It is the board’s plan to completely re-structure this forum so that members can log-in to a bulletin-board-formatted...

page and read only the entries that are of most interest to them. More will be coming on this change soon.

This issue, however, leads to one of my most important goals for this year: To raise the awareness among all APPT members of the various needs within our organization, in hopes that many of you will be interested in becoming more involved.

We, of course, welcome anyone to attend our board meetings, which are generally held on the second Friday morning of each month. Moreover, we genuinely want to hear the suggestions and feedback that you may have on any aspect of the organization or upcoming programming. Yet, even beyond these important forms of input, the coming months will bring critical new leadership opportunities within this organization.

Please, as you read of these opportunities, consider sharing your talents with APPT. Our growing membership roster will soon eclipse what our current small (volunteer) board can reasonably manage. And we know that all of us share in the goal of keeping APPT running smoothly!

With increased leadership and participation from our many gifted members, broader recruitment across the state, and updated and streamlined electronic communications, I believe APPT is poised to become one of the most relevant, active, and influential professional mental health groups in the area.

And with all of the changes coming to the provision of healthcare, it is certainly important that we in private practice work to maintain the highest possible quality of care in order to avoid becoming an “afterthought” compared to the larger clinics and hospitals that may be first in many people’s minds.

Still, given the quality of services I have seen during my seven years of interaction with the private practice community, I feel confident that we have nothing to fear as long as we continue to work together as colleagues and friends.

Clinical Hypnosis Conference Highlights

through Sunday this year. There are price breaks for early registration, and discounts for those, like myself, who only attended part of the full program.

Here are some highlights:

Friday evening kicked off with a tour-bus ride across town to Vanderbilt University. ASCH had arranged for members to visit the Moll Hypnosis Collection at the Eskind Biomedical Library in the Vanderbilt University Medical Center. Albert Moll, MD, studied hypnosis in the late 19th century, and was both a practitioner and writer in the field. Over the course of his career, he accumulated a vast collection of books, pamphlets, and articles on hypnosis and psychotherapy.

Shortly before his death in 1939, he sold his collection to Vanderbilt — fearing that, if not moved, the collection would be destroyed by the Nazis. It was a genuine treat to see, and handle, these unique books — some of them are hundreds of years old. They are available to scholars for research purposes. The facility was gorgeous, and the curator was welcoming and informative.

Saturday began with a plenary session devoted to healthcare reform and the changes that are afoot for us all. The first two speakers were a little sleep-inducing, but the third fellow, Aaron Carroll, MD, was a breath of fresh air. Lively enough to keep up with the likes of Steven Colbert. Check this out: http://bit.ly/aaroncarroll

After a quick break, everyone fanned out to the workshops they preregistered for. On the schedule for me: a full-day workshop, “The Hypnosis Toolbox: Advanced Strategy and Techniques.” Co-taught by three members of the faculty, the workshop kept about 60 of us moving around the breakout room throughout the day — going from full-group classroom style to small group discussions over the course of the day.

The emphasis was on tailoring interventions in a manner that incorporates your clinical assessment of the client and her/his developmental stage — not just using one-size-fits-all solutions. The lead clinician for the day was Elgan Baker, Ph.D., ASCH president. I had originally heard Dr. Baker when he taught a workshop in hypnosis at Menninger’s [back when they were still in Kansas]. At the time, I reckon I understood about 5 percent of what he said. This year, perhaps 10 percent. At this rate, when I’m about 75, I’ll get everything he’s saying. Dr. Baker thinks through a psychodynamic schema, and does so without any time latency. This is what happens when you do something well for a lifetime. Thought-provoking stuff — but it will not be easy for me to implement.

From my perspective, the most accessible speaker of the day was Moshe Torem, MD. This guy knows a lot, but is able to seamlessly communicate it in a manner I could understand. The most valuable nugget was from a one-hour session the following day — his instruction in the area of using Ego State Therapy and hypnosis in the service of helping unresolved grief. A very respectful and powerful approach. I know I can use this.

Sunday began with another plenary session, but this one was different. Mary Jo Peebles, Ph.D., is a psychologist in private practice in Bethesda, MD. She, too, used Terry Moore attended American Society of Clinical Hypnosis 52nd Annual Scientific Meeting and Workshops from March 12-16 at Sheraton Music City in Nashville, Tenn.

He attended sessions that addressed a range of core issues and advanced technical concerns for applying hypnosis in psychotherapy and symptom-focused intervention. The workshop was designed for clinicians with at least intermediate level skill, and featured an applied “how-to” learning experience and that emphasized clinical description, demonstration, supervised practice and personalized feedback. You can read Terry’s article on this conference in this issue of The Compass, beginning on page 1.

The Center for Counseling & Psychotherapy and the newly founded non-profit 2BFertile and RESOLVE: The National Infertility Association celebrated the 20th Annual National Infertility Awareness Week, from April 24 to May 2, joining millions of infertile women and men, healthcare professionals, psychologists, and other thought leaders to promote greater awareness about infertility.

RESOLVE’s National Infertility Awareness Week educates the general public and creates greater awareness and understanding about infertility in Nebraska, “to help women and men find the answers and get the support they need to make important medical decisions and address the medical, emotional, social and economic challenges infertility can present,” said Julie Luzarraga, LICSW, DCSW.

to be affiliated with Menninger’s. She gave a passionate, insightful, and inspiring talk that brought everyone to their feet with applause. She spoke about how we can learn about our clients, and learn about ourselves, in the process of our work. How we inevitably have blind spots that we must strive to identify and overcome. Dr. Peebles spoke with clarity as she described her triumphs and setbacks with her most challenging clients. I might buy the audio recording of that session — it was that good.

The remainder of Sunday [after the short session with Dr. Torem] was with Carol Low, Ph.D. and David Fleming, M.D.: “Complex Trauma, Dissociation, Autonomic Dysregulation, and Physical Disease: A Solution-Focused Approach to Puzzling Medical Disorders.” Just the title is a little overwhelming!

I had gotten interested in Dr. Low’s work a few years ago while getting my ducks in a row for a consultation. Another therapist in Omaha had asked me to potentially help out with one of their clients who was suffering with RSD — now known as Complex Regional Pain Syndrome. I had seen others with this presentation in the past, but felt like I didn’t help very much. I hate that.

The client never did show up to see me, but I had listened to about 10 hours of less-than-stellar audio recordings from Dr. Low’s ASCH presentations from years past. [ASCH has recently switched conference recording companies — so I would bet that this year’s recordings will be improved over past offerings. The new company provides for downloadable mp3 files — no wait for a CD to be mailed to you.]

As a result, I knew that Dr. Low had all this knowledge trapped in her noggin. I wanted to find out if I could understand a bit more about her method by hearing about her work ‘live.’ What’s clear to me is that Drs. Low and Fleming know a lot about pain management and helping with mystery cases. Dr. Fleming is an anesthesiologist who offered Dr. Low a training opportunity early in her career. He handled parts of the presentation that involved the anatomy and physiology of complex pain. Dr. Low handled the psychotherapy and hypnosis interventions.

Like many advanced classes I’ve attended in recent years, this workshop was dense with information and ideas. A lot to digest. Fortunately, they provided attendees with download links to handouts, reading lists, and the PowerPoint files they used during the day. Plenty of material to absorb over a period of time.

You can learn more about Dr. Low’s practice at: http://www.centerforconsciousliving.com/

While the schedule is packed with meetings and seminar sessions, there are opportunities to meet fellow attendees. Breakfast and coffee/beverage service is part of the registration. Some social events and an awards banquet are optional. If you are thinking of adding hypnosis to your armamentarium of therapy tools, please consider ASCH’s trainings. Contact me if you have questions.

Next year’s annual meeting will be held in Las Vegas, NV: March 4–8, 2011 at the Rio Hotel and Casino. Details on the ASCH website: http://asch.net

My thanks to APPT — which generously provided a scholarship that made my attendance a bit more affordable. I am happy to respond to your questions about the use of hypnosis in clinical practice and about ASCH training and certification programs. (See page 5 for the APPT scholarship application.)

Black-White Dialogues: A Lifeboat For All

By Elaine Wells, M.S., LMHP

My spacious middle-class home is in a beautiful quiet neighborhood north of Sorenson Parkway at 50th Street — but just blocks away, gunfire is not uncommon. My new friend from Black-White Dialogues lives on North 42nd Street, and told me this story about two months ago.

She was sleeping downstairs when she heard a crashing noise in the living room. She rushed up to investigate, and realized that her television had been destroyed by bullets fired through her front window in a drive-by shooting. Had she not recently moved her sofa away from the wall where the TV just shattered, one of her family members might have been killed by those bullets. This young woman has a degree in journalism and her head on straight — but she fears that her 14-year-old son (a good student and nice kid) is being drawn into a gang, even though he does not want to be. She has sent him away to live with his father.

While this item may not seem to be specifically related to therapy, I believe we all need to get out of our beautiful, quiet professional offices sometimes and contribute our caring and expertise to this community. North Omaha is literally under fire — and many smart, caring people and organizations are already working together to solve the problems that racism has created in our city. We need to join them.

A cartoon I saw recently shows four men in a boat out at sea. Two are almost submerged in water that is pouring in through a hole in their end of the boat. They are bailing water frantically. The other two men are riding high in their end of the boat, and one says with a smile, “No worries. Our end of the boat is not even in the water.”

Well, dear colleagues, we are all in the same boat. We shouldn’t assume that we won’t sink just because the hole is in the other end of the boat.

My contribution is Black-White Dialogues. The original goal was “to increase mutual understanding and respect” between 25 black and 25 white individuals, by facilitating open and diplomatic conversation, using the communication skills which I teach to couples.

In September 2009, we launched the first series of Black-White Dialogues. It was founded (loosely) on Cognitive/Emotive/Behavioral Therapy. Each week, for six weeks, an expert on some aspect of racism shared factual information (the cognitive part). Then the audience divided into dyads for 30 minutes of up-close and personal conversation about their real-life experience, which was often emotional. The evening ended with the large group discussing how they could take action to help programs that are working to remedy the current situation.

The 78 participants in our second series of BWD are generating quite a buzz, and the most frequent evaluation comment is some variation on the theme: “We need more time to talk among ourselves.” The planning team knows that, but there is only so much we can cram into each 12-hour series, so we hope to offer BWD in a different neighborhood each quarter until we fulfill our new mission: “To eradicate racism in Omaha from the grassroots up.”

You can see more details and register to participate at www.progressiveomaha.com/Black-WhiteDialogues or feel free to call me at (402) 573-1702.

Meeting the New HIPAA Requirements

Although HIPAA (the Health Insurance Portability & Accountability Act) has been around since 1996, many therapists are still not fully in compliance with the legislation’s requirements, which went into full effect in April 2003.

Beginning February 2010, the HIPAA rules are enhanced by the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA or the “Obama Stimulus Act”). The HITECH (Health Information Technology for Economic and Clinical Health) section of the ARRA implements significant penalties for HIPAA breaches. For covered entities:

- HITECH adds explicit fines of up to $1.5 million dollars a year for disclosures of protected health information (PHI) that violate the HIPAA Privacy Rules.
- There is a new mandatory reporting requirement on unauthorized disclosures of PHI.

Therapists who instituted HIPAA compliance principles into their practice several years ago may find that they are no longer in compliance, in particular because of the increase in the integration of electronic devices (computers, laptops, smart phones, tablet PCs, etc.) into their practice and the increasing use of e-mail and the Internet to file insurance claims, verify insurance coverage, and obtain authorizations. You may not have been a covered entity in 2003, but you might be now.

There are multiple areas where HIPAA compliance is required: electing a privacy officer, ensuring security of protected health information, and developing policies and procedures.

If you are a covered entity, you may need to review your policies, procedures, forms, and systems. HIPAA security applies specifically to protected health information — not just personal information.

If you are a covered entity:
- Do you have a “Notice of Privacy Practices”?
- How about a statement of client’s rights?
- Do you ever e-mail your clients? Is your e-mail secure? Does it meet HIPAA standards?
- Do you e-mail client information to any third parties (i.e., billing services, insurance companies)?
- Have you reviewed your business contracts recently, specifically as they relate to protected health information (PHI)?
- Does your current HIPAA information include the client’s right to request (or deny) permission to contact them by cell phone and/or e-mail?

HIPAA standards and laws are constantly evolving, so be sure to get a legal opinion on your practice documents and update them periodically.
